

Michael Tahmoressi (University of Minnesota, the College of Liberal Arts, Minneapolis, MN, US – tahmo004@umn.edu) didn't present a paper, but would like to refer to his article 'Ventriloquism and Cycling' recently published on Favas.net:
<https://favas.net/reports/ventriloquism-and-cycling/>

He reports for Favas.net on his pilot research about accessibility of cycling for non-western immigrants in the Netherlands. He applies ventriloquism as a communication metaphor, which 'explains how the built environment of a transportation system and someone's vehicle of choice can be made to speak.'